

You are invited to an exhibition at the Lauderhill Arts Center.
Rejected and Hoarded is a split-space exhibition exploring a private aspect of the artist's life: rejection.

Celebrated artist Carol-Anne McFarlane usually creates images that spark conversation about social issues. In 2014, however, she is turning her attention to the personal, yet universal, issue of REJECTION.

Carol-Anne McFarlane spent the last year seeking opportunities to share her art and expand her practice. In all but two situations, she was met with rejection. This dismissal had the artist questioning her direction and reflecting on her practice. The result is the Rejected and Hoarded exhibition.

The gallery walls of the Lauderhill Arts Center will be covered with the many rejection letters and non-letters that artist received last year. The exhibition space continues into the artist's studio, where the work that she produced last year is hoarded, the effect of the many rejections.

The show opens March 7th, 7pm, at the Lauderhill Arts Center, 5450 NW 19th Street, Lauderhill, FL 33313. Directions are printed on the reverse of this invitation, for you convenience.

March 22nd, at 3pm, the artist will give a performance and talk about her art practice.

Participate in this exhibition. Included in this invitation is an RSVP card. Reply with your intention to see this show. RSVP cards received before the show opening will be displayed as an interactive audience-based piece.
